

ABDANTAS MISSING!

Game Design Dilemma Ensues

The super techno-brain of board game design, known in Earth Sector as Abdantas, has gone missing, sparking a game design dilemma that has superheroes everywhere cringing in fear.

Meanwhile, fans of his superhero game in progress, a project so ultra-top-secret that no one even knows what it is called - not even Abdantas, himself, have grown restless. Riots have broken out in several cities, and authorities are contemplating whether to declare martial law in order to restore order.

Superheroine Pancake Goddess commented, "It just leaves me feeling emotionally flat."

The mystery continues to deepen.

Iron Druid On Rampage

Fresh on the heels of his recent destruction of the Windy City, Super villain Iron Druid has struck again! This time, the target was a local food mart store in Cowboyville, Montana.

Government officials at all levels remain mystified by this latest attack, calling it an aberration. Several bags of snack food and a low fat chocolate milk were stolen in the heist.

For one local grandmother, Mary Majik, Iron Druid's latest caper was anything but insignificant.

"He's got the whole dad-blamed universe to destroy," she lamented loudly in the parking lot of a local mortician. "And what does he do? He wipes out our food mart."

"This just pisses me off," she continued on, ashes on the end of her Pall Mall glowed a furious bright red.

She paused only long enough to flick the ashes.

"I hope his ass returns," Mrs. Majik blasted. "I've got something for him, if he returns - this .357 Magnum!"

MOON'S ORBIT DECAYS

NASA Warns Of Growing Danger

Earth's moon, long associated with star-crossed lovers, tides, and werewolves, shows signs of orbit decay.

NASA scientists sounded the alarm, following analysis of data from America's latest space probe, Lucky Lunar Thingamabob.

"Great mother of Manhattan!" was all that Florida senior citizen Harry McLarry was able to say, when he learned about the moon's plight following a big Bingo win at a local house of ill repute.

But, not everyone thinks that the moon falling out of its orbit and crashing into our planet is a bad thing.

"Hot damn!" Barry Buzzard of Topeka, Kansas said. "What this here is, is opportunity done come a-knockin'."

Senior diplomats at the United Nations did not share Mr. Buzzard's excitement at the prospect of the Earth getting "mooned."

"All that I can envision is a large crack," said Dr. Luther Allawishious of India's diplomatic legation.

The stock market took the news in stride, however, with pork bellies continuing to dominate trading from opening until the closing bell.